

Center for Soulful Living Vision for 2011

We are in the midst of a great transition. The once revered institutions of Wall Street, the church, medicine and corporate America have witnessed major upheavals in the past decade. Our economic, social, and environmental structures are undergoing fundamental change. This transition is at least as great as the industrial revolution and possibly as great as the enlightenment – the beginning of science. New waves of electronic and biological technologies are signs of this great shift, which is nothing less than a revolution about the nature of reality, about how the world works and our place within it.

Ways of thinking and being that seemed natural and right in the past are incapable of meeting the challenges of the future. As we rethink different aspects of our lives, we can envision CSL as an organization of souls brimming with Light, perfectly placed in a strategic nexus of influence throughout the globe.

CSL was founded on the commitment to being a worldwide community of people dedicated to living in soul-centered and grace-filled ways. As we align with our souls, deeply held beliefs will be redefined as we assist in guiding the transformation of various sectors. As we share our Light and help others connect with their own inner wisdom, power, and brilliance, new definitions and values will emerge in our presence in many fields. CSL will be an increasing source of ongoing connection and soul-based support for all of humanity.

Instrumental in redefining health and happiness, cause and effect, new approaches to healing, living and dying, energy alternatives, CSL players will become known as a power source for transformation. In the same way that people have looked to Planned Parenthood for Family Planning counsel, to the Nature Conservancy for environmental experts, or to Amnesty International to protect human rights, CSL will be a repository of Light that people look to for help in ushering in soulful transformations of organizations, families, and societies.

Their transformative work, by virtue of the “humility” through which the Light flows, will be strong, bold, and powerful. Since power is inherent in all social structures, the emergence of new structures will always change power relations, and in this way CSL will stand for a process of collective empowerment in the midst of change. The “collective avatar” mantle, where power and the potential for leadership are widely acknowledged and distributed, will be the hallmark of the new CSL.

Stories of the great accomplishments of CSL community members will travel to places all over the globe, and tales of effortless accomplishments and manifestations will become inspiring fodder for more shifts in consciousness. And people all over the globe will see that these Light workers don’t use the old command and control ways to change things; they will see that reality within is the “sweet spot”, and it is there, in that sacred space, that the transformation must first take place. As a great man once said, before we have peace on earth, we must first have peace in the hearts of humankind.

CSL members will be game changers. They will uncover the hidden Light connections in their communities to help people everywhere discover that our only boundaries are boundaries of identity, not boundaries of separation. Through their accomplishments, our current narrow understanding of life that is based on the belief that nature can be subjected to human control, will be transformed. As they witness the Light-filled, self-generating, self-organizing, and self-renewing dynamic networks in action, all people will come to understand that our difficulties in organizations and in our lives are simply manifestations of the greater freedom of Life asserting itself against old and restrictive structures.

By the works of CSL, people will begin to see that the process of creation is thoroughly non-linear. As old divisions between disciplines, hierarchies, and branches of science fade, CSL will advance new designs for the future. Through its work, it will be apparent that all creation is spiritual and that the practice of listening to the soul and discovering the reality within is the ultimate formula for holistic creation.
